CURRENT TOPICS.

HIS HONOUR JUDGE LUMLEY-SMITH, K.C., has been appointed a judge of the City of London Court upon the resignation of Mr. Commissioner KERR. Mr. LUMLEY-SMITH has been a county court judge since July, 1892.

THE VACATION Cause List before the Lord Chief Justice on Wednesday last contained thirty-three opposed motions and twenty-two applications to make absolute decrees nisi in divorce causes, one being subsequently struck out. Two further matters were, by consent of the court, added to the list. No case involved a decision of legal importance. His lordship rose shortly after 4 p.m.

THERE APPEARED in the Times of a few days ago a statement that Mr. LAWSON WALTON, K.C., M.P., was about to leave England for Italy under medical advice. We believe that the apprehensions to which this paragraph gave rise are as unfounded as was the statement it contained. Mr. WALTON went abroad some little time ago to recruit his health, returned very much improved, and left for Scotland on Wednesday last.

MR. COMMISSIONER KERR, who now disappears from the bench, is a rather remarkable instance of a man whose popular reputation has been mainly created by the penny-a-liner. He was in reality a very good judge for his court—expeditions in the transaction of business, generally accurate, and always common sense in his decisions. But this was not the source of his fame.
It was due to his pithy and caustic comments on the law and lawyers. He had a Scotchman's horror of wasting money, and in his view every "saxpence" which "went bang" in litigation was wasted. He was never tired of repeating that putting money into the pockets of lawyers was the worst possible way in which money could be spent; and the reporter who watched his utterances generally obtained a harvest of spicy paragraphs, which went through all the newspapers of the kingdom. The public, who do not love lawyers, relished the commissioner's denunciations of them, and were struck with the quaintness of a judge's telling suitors, with the greatest earnestness and gravity, that it was far better to lose money than to go to law, and that if they were wise they would never go to law under any consideration whatever. And so from John o' Groat's to Land's End Mr. KERR became quite a famous personage, and on his retirement from office, is understood to have been offered a baronetcy, which he declined, possibly because of the many saxpences which would have gone bang in fees on the appointment, but more probably because of his common sense hatred of ostentation, which led him also to refuse to consent to any formal leave-taking by the members of the bar who practised in his court. The solicitors do not seem to have very earnestly pressed for an opportunity of expressing their appreciation of his teaching with regard to their branch of the profession.

AT THE Registration Courts it occasionally happens that a political agent, who is not a lawyer, makes some rather ludicrous mistakes in matters of law which occasion trouble and expense.
An instance of this occurred lately at a country court. An objection had been lodged against a name on the ownership list, on the ground that the gentleman objected to was not the owner of the land described in the register. When the matter came up for decision, the agent answerable for the objection stated that he had made inquiries into the title of the gentleman, and had ascertained on good authority that he had no real interest in the land but was "merely tenant of the land by courtesy." In answer to this objection, a solicitor attended and produced the probate of a will and other documents which proved that the land in question had been devised to a certain lady in fee simple in possession. This lady had married the gentleman whose name was on the register, and had died intestate leaving issue, no settlement of the land having been made. Her husband, therefore, became entitled to an estate for life in the land as tenant by the curtesy, and, of course, had as good a freehold interest in the land as anyone could have, and as good a right to be on the register. Tenancy by the curtesy, however, had been quite misunderstood by the non-legal political agent, who was none the less well versed in registration matters. He seemed to think that this sort of tenure was analogous to the right of the son of a marquis to be called "lord." He is not really a lord, but is a lord by courtesy. So the tenant by the curtesy was supposed not to have any real interest in the land, but only to have a claim by courtesy, not of right, to be called the tenant of the land!

AN IMPORTANT question with reference to the meaning of "the public" in the various sections of the Companies Act, 1900, which refer to the offer of shares to the public for subscription, came before the Lord Chief Justice as vacation judge last week in Macmillan v. North Kalguri Co. (Limited) (ante, p. 787). Two gold mining companies had gone into liquidation for the purpose of amalgamation and reconstruction, and shares in the defendant company, which was the new company, were in due course offered to the shareholders in the old companies. These shares were to be of the nominal value of 10s. each, of which 7s. 6d. was to be credited as paid up, and the balance was to be paid in cash. It was apprehended that the circulars sent out offering the shares might be prospectuses within the meaning of the Act of 1900, and to guard against this contingency the necessary particulars were appended. These included a statement that the minimum subscription had been fixed at 50,000 shares. This course, however, led to difficulty. If there had been an invitation to the public to subscribe for shares, then section 6 was applicable, and the company was debarred from commencing business or exercising any borrowing powers until the requirements of the section had been complied with. It was therefore essential that shares subject to the payment of the whole amount thereof in cash should have been allotted to an amount not less than the minimum subscription. Under the circumstances this was impossible, and hence the only way for the company to gain the right to commence business was to establish that there had been no invitation to the public. We should have imagined that there was very little difficulty about this. The shareholders in the old companies, however numerous they might be, were a selected body of persons already interested, and did not include the possible investing class generally, who appear to be described in the Act as the public. Lord ALVERSTONE, though he did not profess to have fully considered the matter, took this view, at any rate to the extent that he refused to grant an injunction restraining the company from commencing business.

SOME IMPORTANT suggestions with regard to registration of title are made in an article entitled "The English Law of Real Property: A Plea for its Amendment," contributed to the current number of the Juridical Review by Mr. CHARLES SWEET. Nominally the article is a review of the last edition—the nineteenth—of WILLIAMS on Real Property, and Mr. SWEET's criticisms on the present state of our real property law are in the spirit of certain remarks of the editor, Mr. T. CYPRIAN WILLIAMS, to which we called attention at the time of publication of the book. A main reason of the intricacy of the present land laws, says Mr. WILLIAMS, is the manner in which they have been altered by statute during the last seventy years. The legislation of the early part of the last century abolished much of the old learning and introduced important simplifications, but the good work then begun has not been continued, and subsequent legislation, Mr. WILLIAMS observes, has almost without exception proceeded on the lines of removing particular instances of hardship without regard to legal principle. The latest example is to be found in Part I. of the Land Transfer Act, 1897. Mr. SWEET elaborates the same theme, and points out the devious and difficult path which the student has to tread before he can pretend to any familiarity with the practice of conveyancing. And having regard to the intricacy of the subject, it is not surprising that its results should give scope for criticism. We do not altogether agree with Mr. SWEET's remark that under the present system conveyancing work is, in the majority of cases, extremely ill done. We should have said that the large majority of cases pointed the other way, though inaccuracies no doubt frequently occur. He himself admits that the number of losses caused by defective titles, though possibly greater than is commonly supposed, is comparatively small, and this is due to the fact that conveyancers have successfully met the difficulties which the law places in their way.

THE REMARKS of Mr. SWEET are, however, by no means confined to criticism of the existing law. He reviews the suggestions which have been made for its amendment, and he indicates the lines which in his opinion registration of title should follow. He reverts to the plan, frequently advocated, that transfer of land should be made to follow as closely as possible the transfer of stocks. The idea, it seems, was first mooted in a scheme propounded to the Real Property Commissioners of 1828-31 by Mr. T. G. FONNEREAU. Simplification of title, he said, could only be obtained by providing that landed property should be transferred like funded property; that the persons whose names were on the register should be absolute proprietors for all marketable purposes; and that any settlement of landed property, where a trust was necessary, should be made, as it is of funded property, by declaration of trust. Subsequently the same idea, though severed from registration, was propounded by Mr. E. P. WOLSTENHOLME, when he suggested that no person entitled to the legal fee simple of land should be allowed to make any disposition for it except to the extent of the whole fee, or for a term of years absolute. All other interests would be created by way of trust. The essential feature of the scheme which Mr. SWEET now puts forward is that these dispositions of the legal fee shall be made on the register. Without registration, he says, landowners cannot be compelled to transfer their land free from restrictions and trusts. Compulsory registration, in his view, is an essential part of any effective scheme for the simplification of titles.

BUT WHILE compulsory registration is thus made the foundation of the system, Mr. SWEET is careful to restrict the work of the registry office within the narrowest possible limits. After remarking on the English dislike of officialism, he observes that a system of registration to be successful here must be extremely simple, and must be as free as possible from official control. His plan is to provide for the registration of the absolute property in all land, and for the transfer and transmission of this property, but no other estates or interests in land would be capable of registration. Other interests might be created, but they would take effect in equity only, and no notice of them would be allowed to be entered on the register. Provision would be made, however, for protecting such unregistered interests by caveat, inhibition, &c. Provision would also be made for registering mortgages, either accompanied or not by a transfer of ownership to the mortgagee. Mr. SWEET claims for this system that it would abolish tenure, except as between landlord and tenant, and would sweep away many of the technical and inconvenient doctrines of the old law; and, further, that it would make every title as simple as the title to land can be. He also points out that the danger of fraud would be greatly lessened if solicitors were employed to vouch the identity of persons transacting business at the registry. A similar precaution is taken by the Bank of England in requiring a transferor of consols to be identified by a broker. So, he observes, "it would be a great safeguard if, on the registration of a transfer, lease, or charge of registered land, the identity of the proprietor and his execution of the instrument were required to be vouched for by his solicitor, and if every solicitor were required to have an official seal, to be used for authenticating documents, as is now done by notaries." No professional agents, Mr. SWEET adds, except solicitors, should be allowed to transact any business connected with the Land Registry. "It is not to the interest of the public that the business of land registration should be conducted by law stationers, or by any other irresponsible class of practitioners." Mr. SWEET's suggestions deserve careful consideration, and they seem to offer a distinct improvement on the present system. If registration is to stay with us it might very well be in some such modified form. The transactions on the register would be reduced to a minimum, and all the ordinary arrangements of settlements, mortgages, and so forth, would be made by deeds off the register. If at the same time the registry fees could, as Mr. SWEET suggests, be made very small, the landowner would be saved the double expense which he now has to incur.

AN INTERESTING decision as to the right of a member of a company to take copies of the register of shareholders was given in Re The Balaghat Gold Mining Co. (49 W. R. 625; 1901, 2 K. B. 665). In order to understand it, it is necessary to refer to section 28 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1863. That section requires companies subject to it to keep a register of debenture stock, and it provides that the register shall be accessible for inspection and perusal at all reasonable times to certain specified classes of persons without fee. Upon this enactment it was held in Mutter v. Eastern and Midlands Railway Co. (36 W. R. 401, 38 Ch. D. 92) that the right to inspect carried with it the right also to take copies, and this upon the ground that the latter right could not be denied without rendering the right to inspect practically useless. "If," said LINDLEY, L.J., "the court were to hold that in such a case as the present the right to inspect existed, but the right to take copies did not, the court would in effect be rendering the statute of no avail." In Boord v. African Consolidated Land Co. (46 W. R. 150; 1898, 1 Ch. 596) the question arose whether a similar construction was to be given to section 32 of the Companies Act, 1862. That section requires that the register of members which is to be kept at the office of the company shall be open to the inspection of any member gratis, and to other persons on payment of a shilling or such less sum as the company may prescribe; and every such member or other person may require a copy of the register or any part of it on payment of sixpence for every hundred words required to be copied. The insertion of this right to obtain copies on payment makes an obvious difference between section 32 of the Companies Act, 1862, and section 28 of the Companies Clauses Act of 1863, but NORTH, J., in Boord v. African Consolidated Land Co. held that it did not cut off the member's right to take copies for himself, which had in Mutter's case been held to be ancillary to the right to inspect. The power to call on the company to give a copy of the register he regarded as an additional privilege. In fact, however, it takes away the ground on which Mutter's case was decided. There the person inspecting had no right to obtain copies at all unless he took such a right as incident to his right to inspect; and he took it, so it was held, because otherwise his right to inspect would be nugatory. But under the Act of 1862 the Legislature, in conferring the right to inspect, have pointed out also the way in which copies are to be obtained, and there is no essential reason for extending the right of inspection to the right for the member himself to take copies. The Court of Appeal, accordingly, in Re The Balaghat Gold Mining Co. (Limited), have overruled Boord v. African Consolidated Land Co., and have denied a member's right to take copies.

There is a rumour that Master George Pollock, the King's Remembrancer, and the senior Master in the King's Bench Division; Master Johnson, one of the senior King's Bench Masters; and Mr. E. O. Cooke, the head of the Parliamentary and Municipal Election Petitions Department at the Royal Courts of Justice, will shortly resign their respective appointments.

Referring to the increase in the business of the City of London Court, a correspondent of the Times says that when Mr. Commissioner Kerr was appointed judge in May, 1899, upon the death of Mr. Michael Prendergast, Q.C., the business was carried on in a comparatively small room in a very small building. This was rebuilt a few years ago at an expense of £24,000, and the cases are now heard in two of the best courts of the country. At the time of his election, the staff consisted of the registrar, seven assistant clerks, a high bailiff, and five officers, whereas to-day the business is so voluminous that the presence is required of the registrar, an assistant registrar, 21 assistant clerks, a high bailiff, and 13 subordinate officers. A shorthand writer was appointed by the corporation in 1893. In 1880 the number of actions heard was 9,970, the fees paid were £4,265, and the amount sued for was £32,911. The fee income of the court is now about £20,000 a year, the amount sued for is about £200,000 a year, and the number of actions brought averages about 32,000 a year.

THE RELEASE OF SURETIES.

PROBABLY there are few departments of law which have so many surprises for the ordinary man of business as that of principal and surety, and it requires a severely technical mind to follow the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the recent case of Re E. W. A. (a Debtor) (49 W. R. 642; 1901, 2 K. B. 642). In September, 1899, the Professional and Trades Papers Co. (Limited) was indebted to the Capital and Counties Bank in the sum of £6,000, and E. W. A., referred to subsequently as A., and one B. gave the bank their joint and several guarantee for the amount. In October, 1900, the bank recovered judgment against A. and B. jointly and severally for £6,000, and a petition in bankruptcy was presented against B. founded on the judgment debt. Before any order was made, an arrangement was come to between the parties under which B. was to pay £3,000 and the petition was to be withdrawn. The arrangement was embodied in a document addressed to B.'s solicitors and signed by the solicitors to the bank, by which the latter acknowledged the receipt of £2,500 in cash and five bills at various dates for £100 each "in full discharge of all claims by the Capital and Counties Bank (Limited) against B. in connection with the Professional and Trade Papers Co. (Limited), and all guarantees given by him to the bank in connection with that company, and in settlement of any outstanding questions as to the amount due to the bank." The document was dated the 7th of March, 1901, and on the 26th of the same month the bank presented a bankruptcy petition against A. with a view to recovering the remaining £3,000. A. opposed the petition on the ground that there was no debt, his liability having been discharged by the arrangement between the bank and B., but Mr. Registrar LINKLATER overruled his contention and made a receiving order. Against this the debtor appealed, and his appeal was allowed.

The law relating to transactions of the above nature starts from a rule which is at once logical and perfectly well settled. If there is a joint debt, and the debt is released as regards one of the joint debtors, the debt itself is gone, and with it also the liability of the other debtor. In Chestham v. Ward (1 Bos. & P. 630) the obligee in a joint and several bond made one of the two obligors his executor, with the result that the action on the bond was discharged as to both obligors. Where the liability is joint, a discharge of one debtor, or a satisfaction by one, said EYRE, O.J., is a discharge of both, and the rule was recognized in Nicholson v. Revill (4 A. & E. 675). In this latter case there was a disposition to enforce it strictly, and to deny the possibility of any abandonment of the remedy against one debtor without at the same time relieving the other. Hence, doubt was thrown upon the judgment of Lord ELDON in Ex parte Gifford (6 Ves. 805), where it was intimated that a creditor might, in discharging the principal debtor, reserve his rights against the surety. Some of Lord ELDON's expressions, said Lord DENMAN, C.J., in Nicholson v. Revill, would seem to lay it down that a joint debtor might release one of his debtors, and yet, by using some language of reservation between himself and such debtor, keep his remedy entire against the others, even without consulting them. "If," continued the Chief Justice, "Lord ELDON used any language which could be so interpreted, we must conclude that he either did not guard himself so cautiously as he intended, or that he did not lend that degree of attention to the legal doctrine connected with the case before him which he was accustomed to afford."

The apparent inconsistency between the strict legal doctrine applied in Nicholson v. Revill (supra), that a discharge to the debtor is necessarily a discharge to the surety also, has been reconciled with the doctrine of Ex parte Gifford (supra) by holding that a deed purporting to discharge the debtor will, if the discharge is accompanied by a proviso reserving the creditor's rights against the surety, be construed not as an absolute discharge, but as a covenant not to sue the debtor. This construction was adopted in Solly v. Forbes (2 Brod. & B. 38) upon the principle that a release must be construed for the particular purpose for which it was made. It was possible, therefore, to restrict the primâ facie effect of the discharge to the debtor by considering what was necessarily intended by the reservation of the remedy against the surety. The matter is assisted by the analogous case where the creditor gives time to the debtor. If he enters into a binding agreement with the debtor to this effect without the consent of the surety, it is a well-settled rule that the surety is thereby discharged. It is competent, however, for the creditor to avert this result by inserting in the agreement an express reservation of his rights against the surety, and this is effectual, even though the surety is no party to the arrangement. And it is the same where the creditor, without actually discharging the debt, accepts a composition from the debtor. The cases are numerous, said PARKE, B., in Kearsley v. Cole (16 M. & W., p. 135), that a reserve of remedies, though without the consent of the surety, prevents the discharge of the surety which would otherwise be the result of a composition with or giving time to the debtor by a binding instrument. And he pointed out that the reserve of remedies in the first place rebuts the implication that the surety was meant to be discharged, which is one of the reasons why a surety is ordinarily exonerated by the acceptance of a composition or the giving of time; and in the second it prevents the rights of the surety from being impaired; "for the debtor cannot complain if, the instant after, the surety enforces those rights against him, and his consent that the creditor shall have recourse against the surety is, impliedly, a consent that the surety shall have recourse against him."

And just as a creditor in giving time to his debtor can reserve his remedy against the surety, so even though he purports to give the debtor an absolute discharge, he can cut down the effect of the discharge and turn it into a covenant not to sue the debtor by inserting a similar reservation. The judgment of Wood, V.C., in Webb v. Hewitt (3 K. & J. 438) seems at first sight to revert to the stricter doctrine. A release, he said, stands upon an entirely different footing from an agreement to give time, and when an actual release is given, no right against the surety can be reserved, for the debt is gone at law. But in that case there had been an arrangement under which the creditor took over all the debtor's property, and it was held that this did in fact amount to payment of the debt. Hence there was no liability remaining on the surety, and a reservation of remedies against him would be futile. That the case extends no further, and does not impugn the doctrine that a reservation of remedies against the surety may by construction reduce the effect of a discharge to the debtor, is abundantly clear from the subsequent case of Bateson v. Gosling (L. R. 7 C. P. 9). There a deed of arrangement under the Bankruptcy Acts, 1861 and 1869, contained a release of the debtor, subject to a proviso reserving the rights of creditors holding securities or for whose debts any persons were liable as sureties. It was admitted by WILLES, J., that where there was a real release and extinguishment of the debt no right against the surety could be reserved. But in the case before him there was no such extinguishment, and consequently the proviso was capable of having an effect given to it in accordance with the intention of the parties. It reduced the discharge of the debtor to a covenant not to sue him. The debt itself was thus left intact, and the creditor's rights against the surety remained.

In the above cases it is assumed that there has been a formal release under seal, but where, as in Re E. W. A. (supra), this is not the case, but the alleged release is part of a transaction not under seal, then, even though there has been no reservation of rights against the surety, the effect of the arrangement may be qualified by the attendant circumstances. "In each case," said STIRLING, J., in Re Wolmershausen, "it has to be determined whether what has occurred amounts to a release, and where, as here, no formal release is given, but what is relied on is an agreement not under seal, then, in determining the effect of that agreement, the surrounding circumstances and the intention of the parties must be regarded." In that case it was held that the agreement in question, whereby one surety was released, did not release the co-sureties. The former had become bankrupt and the intention was merely to release his estate; and a similar result had been arrived at in the earlier case of Ex parte Good (25 W. R. 422, 5 Ch. D. 46), where JESSEL, M.R., pointed out that the document, which was in form of receipt, and was not under seal, must, like all other documents not under seal, be construed with reference to the surrounding circumstances. In Re E. W. A., also, it is likely enough that had the Capital and Counties Bank had their attention specifically called to the effect of granting a release to one of the sureties for the Professional and Trades Papers (Limited), they would have expressly declared that they had no intention of releasing the other surety, and their rights against such other surety would have been expressly reserved. This, however, was not done, and, apart from guessing, there was no evidence that the effect of the release was to be restricted. As to the construction, indeed, of the document embodying the arrangement for release ROMER, L.J., was doubtful, and was inclined to treat it as amounting, not to a discharge of the debt itself, but only to a discharge of the particular debtor from the liability against himself personally; in other words, as an agreement by the bank not to sue him. But COLLINS, L.J., with whom RIGBY, L.J., agreed, gave more effect to the express statement that the cash and bills were accepted in full discharge of all claims against the surety, and held that the effect was to extinguish the debt and so release the co-surety. In dealing with debts in respect of which there is a joint liability, the probable result that a discharge may extend further than is intended should be carefully borne in mind.

REVIEWS.

THE INNER TEMPLE.

A CALENDAR OF THE INNER TEMPLE RECORDS. Edited by F. A. Inderwick, K.C., One of the Masters of the Bench. VOLUME III: 12 CHARLES II. (1660)—12 ANNE (1714). Henry Sotheran & Co.; Stevens & Haynes; Stevens & Sons (Limited).

This volume carries through a very interesting period the series of documents which Mr. Inderwick is editing. The templars were well prepared for the home-coming of Charles II., and in August, 1660, we find the king a guest at the feast given by Sir Heneage Finch, then reader of the Inner Temple. He came in the royal barge from Whitehall, accompanied by the Duke of York, and an extensive retinue, and a portion of the retaining wall was removed so as to provide a landing stage and enable the royal party to land in the Inner Temple garden. But the cost of the proceedings seems to have frightened prospective "readers," and in the following November an order was made by the benchers with a view to reducing the expense of entertainments. The plague, says Mr. Inderwick in his Introduction, which had for many years visited the Temple, found the lawyers as ready as ever to deal with its advance by flying from its contagion. This was the time-honoured and generally successful plan adopted by the inn. On notice of any case of suspicious sickness within the society, commons, moots, and readings were postponed, and the inhabitants betook themselves to the country homes of their parents or their friends. The Great Plague accordingly found the Temple deserted, and beyond the notices of adjournment of 1665 and 1666 no record of it appears in the books. The Great Fire furnishes more copious records. The Temple, although ample supplies of water were at hand, both from the New River and the Thames, was quite unprovided with appliances for utilizing it against the fire, and when Fleet-street, Ludgate-hill, and Fetter-lane were in flames it seemed as if the inn with its venerable church were doomed. Much of the inn was indeed destroyed, but the wind which had fanned the fire fell just in time to render successful the efforts to save the church. The records shew in detail the parts of the inn, including King's Bench-walk, which were consumed. In October, 1666, the benchers commenced proceedings for the rebuilding, and arrangements were made with various members under which the members restored their chambers at their own cost on condition of having a free grant of them for three lives.

In the spring of 1668-9 a curious conflict took place between the templars and the civic authorities. The templars had from earliest times declared themselves to be extra-parochial and beyond the jurisdiction of the city authorities, while the latter claimed that the Temples were in the suburbs of the city lying outside the city walls. The templars further contended that the lord mayor, since he had no control over them, was not entitled to bear up his sword within their confines. The point came to practical test on the 3rd of March, 1668-9, when the Lord Mayor, Sir William Turner, was engaged to dine with Mr. Goodfellow, the reader of the Inner Temple. It got to be known that the lord mayor intended to come in state and to bear up his sword through the inn and within the hall. Negotiations took place with a view to get him to waive this assertion of authority, and he was told by the spokesmen of the Temple that if he would accommodate the members as to this particular ceremony, he would be received with every mark of cordiality and respect. At first the lord mayor said he would not come at all; then, after consulting with the aldermen, he sent a message to the reader: "I will come and dine with him, I will bear up my sword and see who dares to take it down." These were brave words, but on his approaching the hall he found the great staircase thronged with barristers and students, some of whom carried their swords under their gowns, and who were determined to resist this invasion of their rights. The sword-bearer and other members of the lord mayor's retinue were very roughly used, and apparently the lord mayor, after taking temporary shelter, had to go home without his dinner. The matter came before the Privy Council, who declined to interfere until the rights and privileges of the Temple had been tried before the courts. This, however, was not done, and the city seems to have abandoned its claim.

Another fire took place in the Temple in 1677, and a still more disastrous one in January, 1678-9. It was caused by a flaming piece of coal falling from the grate on to the deal boards next the hearth in one of the chambers. At this time engines of a kind had been provided, but the frost was so intense that water could not be obtained in the ordinary way, and buckets had to be passed from hand to hand. Great damage was done, but, as in 1666, the flames were stopped just as they reached the church. The fire lasted from eleven on Sunday night to noon on Monday. Other interesting matters with which Mr. Inderwick deals are the repair of the Temple Church under the advice of Sir Christopher Wren in 1681-2, the choice of an organ, and the series of plays which were performed in the Inner Temple Hall between 1660 and 1668. The organ was not chosen until the rival builders, Bernard Smith and Renatus Harris, had each erected an instrument in the chapel and submitted it to the opinion both of the benchers and the general public. Even then Lord Jeffries, as lord chancellor, had to be called in to settle the disputed claims, and he decided in favour of Smith. It is satisfactory to notice that Harris was liberally treated, and he received £200. The successful organ was purchased for £1,000. The introduction which Mr. Inderwick has prepared, and from which the above details are taken, forms very delightful reading.

Treasury Chambers, September 27, 1901.

Justices of the peace are, says the Albany Law Journal, proverbially, notoriously uncertain, not only as to their knowledge of the law, but as to what application they will make of such knowledge as they may possess. We are led to the reflection by observing that a Chicago official of the class referred to not long ago imposed a novel sentence upon a youth who had been brought before him on the charge of playing ball in the public streets, and for the added offence of advising a public officer who wished him to desert to go and jump in the river. The accused having been convicted, the justice did not sentence him to the county jail or to the house of correction, but he ordered the youth to save 100 dollars. The culprit is to report to the court at stated intervals and exhibit his savings bank account, sentence to be suspended only as long as he shows reasonable progress toward the accumulation of the sum stated. The sentence, so far as we are aware, is a novelty in petty criminal jurisprudence, and we quite agree with a contemporary that it is likely to be much better for the young man than any of the other customary sentences in similar cases—so much better that it seems to be worthy of imitation by other magistrates who are honestly seeking reformatory methods and influences.

LAW SOCIETIES.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

ANNUAL PROVINCIAL MEETING.

PROGRAMME.

Monday, October 7.—9.30 p.m. Members and ladies attending the meeting are invited to a reception to be given at the City Buildings, by joint invitation of the Mayor and Deputy-Mayor, representing the City, and of the Berke, Bucks and Oxon Incorporated Law Society. Guests will be received from 9.30 to 10. Carriages may be ordered at 11. Special tickets of admission to be produced on entrance.

Tuesday, October 8.—11 a.m. Members will meet at the Sheldonian Theatre (entrance from Broad-street), when the Vice-Chancellor of the University, the Rev. Thomas Fowler, D.D., President of Corpus Christi College, has kindly consented to be present and address the meeting. The President of the society, the Right Hon. Sir Henry Fowler, M.P., will then give his Presidential Address. This will be followed by the reading and discussion of papers contributed by members of the society. 1.30 p.m. Adjournment for luncheon. 2.30 to 4.30 p.m. Meeting at the Sheldonian Theatre resumed. 7 p.m. Dinner in Balliol College Hall, by kind permission of the Master and Fellows of the College. The chair will be taken by Mr. Henry Baines, President of the Berke, Bucks and Oxon Incorporated Law Society. Ladies will be admitted to the gallery of the hall at 8.30 p.m. on presentation of their tickets. Carriages may be ordered at 10.45.

Wednesday, October 9.—10 a.m. Meeting of the Solicitors' Benevolent Association at the Sheldonian Theatre. 11 a.m. Meeting resumed for the reading and discussion of papers. 1.30 p.m. Adjournment for luncheon. 2.30 p.m. Meeting at the Sheldonian Theatre resumed. 4.30 p.m. Close of the business of the meeting. 9 p.m. Members and ladies are invited by the president and members of the Berke, Bucks and Oxon Incorporated Law Society to the New Examination Schools (entrance in High-street), where a conversation will be held. The entertainment will include selections by Ashton's Blue Austrian Band, and other music. Special tickets of admission to be produced on entrance. Carriages may be ordered at 11.15.

Thursday, October 10.—An excursion will be made to Woodstock to view Blenheim Palace and Gardens, by kind permission of the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough. The arrangements will be as follows: 10.45 a.m. Special train leaves Oxford (G.W.K. Station, down side). Members and ladies will obtain return railway tickets, free of charge, on presentation at the booking office of the special tickets issued for the excursion. 11.15 a.m. Arrival at Woodstock. 11.45 to 1.45. Visit to Blenheim Palace and Gardens. 2 p.m. Luncheon at the King's Arms Hotel; tickets to be given up at the hotel. 3 to 4 p.m. After luncheon the charters of the borough will be on view at the Council Chamber, and the Town Clerk, Mr. Adolphus Ballard, will be present to show and explain them. The park also will be open as usual. 4.30 p.m. Special train departs, arriving at Oxford at 5 p.m. Members and ladies desiring to go by road can have accommodation provided for them in brakes on making application in person at the office of the reception committee (opposite the Sheldonian Theatre) or in writing to the honorary secretary; but no application can be received or information given after 4.30 p.m. on Tuesday, the 8th of October. Information as to time and place of starting will be given later.

Note.—The other proposed excursion, to Abingdon and Nuneham, in consequence of the small number of applications for tickets, will not take place. Members who have already applied will have tickets supplied to them for the excursion to Blenheim instead. In case these are not satisfactory, they may be returned to the secretary at any time before Tuesday, the 8th of October, for repayment of the price paid.

MANCHESTER INCORPORATED LAW ASSOCIATION.

The following are extracts from the report of the committee for 1900-1:

Members.—The association now consists of 262 members. Since the last annual meeting five new members have been elected, and five have resigned.

Legal Education.—Lectures have been given in the Law Department of the Owens College during the session of 1900-1, and law classes have been held in connection with such lectures. The vice-chancellor's prize in equity has been awarded to Mr. Sydney Cox, who is not yet entitled to any solicitor, and the prize in real property and conveyancing to Mr. Thomas Hilderley, who is entitled to Mr. Johnston, of Stockport. Your committee regret to record that there was no student qualified to take the Stephen Heelis medal for last year.

Powers of District Registrars of High Court in Chancery Proceedings in the District Registries of Manchester and Liverpool during Vacation.—A joint letter signed by the president of the Liverpool Law Society and your president was sent to Mr. Justice Farwell, suggesting that the District Registrars of Manchester and Liverpool should be empowered to act as Vacation Chief Clerks in matters pending in their registries during vacation. Your committee are pleased to report that the joint efforts of the two societies have been successful and an addition to ord. 35, r. 6a, giving the necessary powers has been made.

Paper or Parchment Probates.—In November, 1900, a notice was issued by the President of the Probate Division, that after the 1st of January, 1901, special paper would be used for grants of probate, instead of parchment, and that the copy of the will must also be engrossed on paper of a similar quality, and must be stitched up bookwise—with the probate. It seemed to your committee that the probate of a will needed to be of stronger and more durable material than paper, and a resolution was passed objecting to the proposed regulation, and a copy was forwarded to the Senior Registrar at the Principal Registry. Strong representations to the like effect were also made by the Incorporated Law Society, U.K., with the result that the President has modified the order to the extent that solicitors may bring in either paper or parchment engrossments, as they prefer, and that in any special cases solicitors may apply to have the probate piece or administration piece of parchment, instead of paper. Your committee suggest that in order to reap the full advantage of the concessions made by the President of the Probate Division, solicitors should continue to engross the probates of all wills on parchment, but in bookwise form.

Manchester District Registry—Probate Division.—Mr. District Registrar Hardy has, at the request of the President of the Probate Division, called the attention of your committee to the fact that fees have from time to time been paid by solicitors or their clerks to the clerks at the Manchester Probate Registry by way of "expedition moneys," as a reward for doing work, which, as paid servants of the Crown, they were bound to do. Mr. Registrar Hardy stated that the President of the Probate Division strongly disapproved of the practice, and he requested that the members of the association would aid him in suppressing it. A circular was sent to the members, enclosing a copy of Mr. Registrar Hardy's letter.

Apportionment of Weekly Rents on Completion of Purchase.—Your committee having been asked to express their opinion whether the vendor is entitled to claim rent for the actual day of completion passed the following resolution: "That, in the opinion of the committee, upon any apportionment of weekly rents for the purpose of completion of a purchase, the rent for the day of completion is not payable to the vendor."

Section 56 Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881.—Your committee were also asked for an expression of opinion on the meaning of the words "a solicitor" in the above section, and they passed a resolution that in the absence of any judicial decision to the contrary, payment to a managing clerk (admitted or unadmitted) producing a deed with receipt for consideration money therein, is not payment to a solicitor. A copy of the resolution was sent to the profession in Manchester and neighbourhood.

After-acquired Property of a Bankrupt.—The subject of dealings by an undischarged bankrupt with after-acquired real property came before your committee, who considered that it was desirable that the law should be amended by requiring that all bankruptcies should be registered at the Land Registry Office in like manner as his pendens, and that a purchaser or mortgagee should take free from all claims under a bankruptcy which had not been so registered or re-registered within five years before the purchase from or mortgage by the undischarged bankrupt. It is understood that the subject is being considered by the Incorporated Law Society with a view to legislation.

INFORMATION REQUIRED.

Sir ANDREW FAIRBAIRN, deceased.—Villa Trois Fontaines, Biarritz, the property of the late Sir Andrew Fairbairn. Wanted, a Deed, or French Will, relating exclusively to the above villa, believed to have been executed by Sir Andrew Fairbairn, between January, 1898, and June, 1901, or information respecting the same. Dibb & Co., 6, Butte-court, Leeds.

GENERAL.

The Master of the Rolls is stated to be seriously ill.

It is announced that Mr. W. Sutherland has been appointed to the post of assistant secretary in the Estate Duty Office of the Inland Revenue in the place of Mr. A. J. King, who has retired from the service.

It is announced that Mr. Courtney Hallett has succeeded to the appointment of chief clerk to the Special Commissioners of Income Tax, in succession to Mr. J. Mayhew, retired on superannuation.

Mr. Atkinson, the Irish Attorney-General, who has on no fewer than five occasions declined judicial promotion, has, says the Westminster Gazette, now applied for the puisne judgeship vacant by the death of Mr. Justice Murphy, to which the Attorney-General is, according to unbroken precedent in Ireland, entitled.

The custom of counsel identifying himself with his client led, says the Daily Mail, to a rather funny episode during an application, on Wednesday last, for a receiver of rents to be appointed. "Your lordship will see by the affidavits," said counsel—"I have read the affidavits," said the Lord Chief Justice—"that it is alleged that these moneys were not paid over because they were expended on my education and maintenance. Now, my lord, as I was married in 1897, it is obvious the money did not go towards my education." Lord Alverstone shook his head. "That depends, you know," he said. "Sometimes education goes on after marriage. How old were you when you married?" "Nineteen, my lord," said counsel, who was by far the youngest-looking barrister in court. But only the non-legal listeners laughed.

We are requested by the Under-sheriff of Sussex and Deputy-sheriff of Kent to notify that in consequence of the approaching termination of the lease of his offices, 24, Bedford-row, London, and their demolition, the office of the Sheriffs of Sussex and Kent will, until further notice, be 31, Great James-street, Bedford-row, to which address all writs and warrants should be sent.

An Arkansas lawyer writes, says the Central Law Journal, that some years ago a lawyer living in Illinois thought he might venture to open an office in Arkansas, but first wrote to an acquaintance there, telling of his plan, but saying that he was a Republican and wished to know if his life would be safe, and also if there was an opening there for an honest lawyer. His Arkansas correspondent replied that he could come with perfect impunity, as the game laws would protect his life, and that as an honest lawyer he would be absolutely without competition in the State.

Sir William Henry Rattigan, K.C., who has been elected M.P. for North-East Lanark, was called to the bar in 1873, and was made a Queen's Counsel in 1897. He practised chiefly in India, and has been judge of the Chief Court of Punjab on four occasions. He was an additional member of the Supreme Legislative Council of India, 1892-93, and a member of the Punjab Legislative Council, 1898-99. He has published works on "The Science of Jurisprudence," 1892, "Private International Law," 1895, "Digest of Customary Law for Punjab," 1895, "De Jure Personarum," or "The Roman Law of Persons," 1873, and a translation of the second volume of "Savigny's System of Modern Roman Law."

Among the remedies for uncontrolled passion manifested in lynchings are, says the Central Law Journal, laws making the people of the locality where lynchings occur liable for money damages for such lawless deeds. The state of Ohio has such a law which has been sustained by the supreme court. Charles W. Mitchell was lynched in Urbana, the 4th of June, 1897. Benjamin F. Church was appointed administrator for his estate. He brought suit against Champaign county under the anti-lynching law for 5,000 dols. damages. The verdict of the trial court was for the plaintiff. The case has been carried through all intermediate courts to the supreme court, in every one of which the verdict of the trial court has been sustained. This settles the law for Ohio. It remains to be seen how effective this remedy will be in preventing lynching.

The following are the arrangements made for hearing probate and divorce causes during the ensuing Michaelmas sittings—(Undisputed matrimonial causes will be taken on Thursday, the 24th, and Friday, the 25th inst., and on each Monday during the sittings after motions. Common jury causes will be taken on and after Tuesday, the 29th inst. Probate and defended matrimonial causes for hearing before the court itself will be taken after the common juries are finished, and may also be taken in Court II., after the 25th inst., when Admiralty cases are not appointed to be heard. Special jury causes will be taken on and after Tuesday, the 26th of November. Divisional Courts will be formed to sit on Tuesday, the 5th of November, and Tuesday, the 3rd of December. Motions will be heard in court at 11 o'clock on Monday, the 28th of October, and on each succeeding Monday during the sittings, and summonses before the judge will be heard at 10.30 on Saturday, the 26th of October, and on each succeeding Saturday during the sittings. Summonses before the registrars will be heard at the Probate Registry, Somerset House, on each Tuesday and Friday during the sittings at 11.30.

At the Working Men's College, Great Ormond-street, on Saturday, Professor A. V. Dicey, the principal, delivered an address on "English Law as a branch of Liberal Education." He said that as part of a liberal education he considered the study of law in three aspects—as a branch of applied logic, in its relation to morality, and as a record of opinion. Law was applied logic, and its study should lead to lucidity in the expression of ideas and logical deduction from acknowledged rules and facts. The student at once found instances at hand calling into play the reasoning and logical faculties upon questions such as contract and agreement and the inferences as to fraud or mistake; injury and damage, liability, negligence, and many other points. Profoundly interesting would be found the study of the relations between law and morals and the consideration of what those relations should be. There was a relation but not a coincidence between the two, and he gave illustrations from many cases in the reports showing how the casuistry of the law had been applied to diverging lines of duty. As a record of opinion, the severe laws of the past against witchcraft indicated that the belief in witchcraft was strong, and when fortune-tellers and palmists in modern days were charged with fraud it was evident there was some survival of that set of opinions. Again, the laws of the past generation embodied the opinions of Benthamism, that people were best left to manage their own affairs. Thus the usury laws were abolished. Now there was a Money-lending Act, and this indicated a flow of opinion in a contrary direction. Similar changes in public opinion were indicated in the laws altering the position of married women and in reference to combination and conspiracy.
